The American Dream and Promise Act of 2019, or H.R. 6, would put over 2.5 million Dreamers and immigrants eligible for Temporary Protected Status (TPS) or Deferred Enforced Departure (DED) on a pathway to citizenship. Individuals who are eligible for protection under the bill have lived in the United States for much of their lives; the average Dreamer came to the United States at the age of 8, while the average TPS- or DED-eligible person arrived in 1997. Without permanent protections such as those in H.R. 6, these immigrants’ and their families’ futures in the United States—as well as the fiscal and economic contributions they make—are at risk.

Immigrants eligible for protection under H.R. 6 are part of Hawaii’s social fabric

- Hawaii is home to 7,500 immigrants who are eligible for protection under the Dream and Promise Act.
- These individuals live with 22,900 family members; among those family members, 1,400 are U.S.-born citizen children.
- Dreamers in Hawaii who are eligible for protection under the bill arrived in the United States at the average age of 9.

Hawaii’s economy benefits from immigrants eligible for protection under H.R. 6

- Immigrants eligible for the Dream and Promise Act own 100 homes in Hawaii and pay $3,500,000 in annual mortgage payments.
- Eligible immigrants and their households contribute $117,700,000 in federal taxes and $55,100,000 in state and local taxes each year.
- Annually, these households generate $367,900,000 in spending power.

Nicole Prchal Svajlenka is a senior policy analyst for Immigration Policy at the Center for American Progress.
Endnotes

4 Spending power is measured as household income after federal, state, and local tax contributions.